Our Ruth Gruber: A Loving Remembrance

Barbara Ribakove

It seems impossible now, but the first time I spoke with Ruth Gruber, I had never heard of her. She was just a voice on the telephone, telling me she was a journalist who wanted to visit Jews in Ethiopia, and had heard about NACOEJ missions. Could she join one?

This was not long after Operation Moses (1984-85), the great Israeli airlift of Ethiopian Jews from Sudanese refugee camps.

NACOEJ was virtually alone then in insisting that there were still thousands of Jews suffering in Ethiopia. The then-Communist government of Ethiopia was not thrilled about welcoming us.

I was very wary of bringing journalists to Ethiopia because too much publicity could get Jews we met into trouble, and might get us banned from their villages.

But Ruth was persuasive. So I called my contact at the Israeli Consulate in Manhattan, and asked if she knew a Ruth Gruber, journalist, and could I trust her on a mission?

Ruth and me at a NACOEJ event years ago.

There was a pause, and then my Israeli contact said: “Well, Ruth was the only foreign journalist we trusted to see the Jews coming in in Operation Moses!”

So, of course, I called Ruth and signed her on.

In fact, our next mission was one in which we were banned from visiting Jewish villages because of publicity about Operation Moses. Five of us went anyway, because we got...
The education of the people of this country, the fate of this country depends.”

He referred to England, but his words are equally applicable to Israel.

Israel needs educated citizens, the children need the Limudiah, and we need you.

Please help make Israel stronger by helping these special little Israelis get the education that will enable them to become productive, contributing citizens in the future. Thank you.

A Thoughtful Fairy Godmother for the Limudiah

Everyone would like to have a really nice uncle – or aunt - or fairy godmother – who can be counted on to show up with presents.

The Limudiah in the Abir Yaakov School in Yavne has just such a thoughtful “relative”.

On an Israel Good Deeds Day, representatives of the local branch of Bank Hapoalim arrived at the old school building with supplies for activities with the Limudiah kids.

First, it was bright paint to repaint the school fence, plus seedlings to plant a garden of flowers and herbs. The bank staff and Limudiah staff worked along with the students on painting and gardening. Later they also sent sweets, masks, and decorations for Purim, and treats for Passover.

This school year, so far, the gifts have been ten brand-new computers, which the Limudiah children generously agreed to share with all their school mates.

The computers arrived with some special fanfare, accompanied not only by bank officials, but by a representative of the Mayor of Yavne.

One of our Limudiah students, a third-grader, Yonatan Belay, along with NACOEJ School Coordinator Debi Segev, presented a certificate of thanks to the warm-hearted staff of the bank.

We’d like to add our own thanks to Debi, who initiated this special relationship.

And we want to give special thanks to you, our NACOEJ donors, whose contributions fund the Abir Yaakov Limudiah.

It’s you who provide the wonderful program where Good Deeds happen every day for the Limudiah children. Thank you.

a message from Ethiopian-Jewish religious leaders: “For G-d’s sake, come to Ethiopia.” They said, “Even if you can’t go to any villages, everyone will know you came, and that they are not abandoned!”

One of the five of us who went was Ruth. We couldn’t go to the villages, but Jews waited for us on the road from our hotel in Gondar. Some walked two days to find us in the market. Ruth took notes on everything. I asked her not to publish, and she didn’t.

Later, when we were allowed to visit some villages again, Ruth came along for a second time. She was 74, which seemed to me a very advanced age for climbing hills and trekking over rocks – but Ruth was never daunted.

Ruth didn’t write about that trip then, but she interviewed many Ethiopian Jews in Israel, studied their history, and later wrote a great book - “Rescue: The Exodus of the Ethiopian Jews”. At my request, it barely mentioned NACOEJ – though by then she was on our Board.

It wasn’t until she wrote “Witness” in 2007 (see reply card) that Ruth did include her Ethiopian experience with NACOEJ, and some of the photos she took.

By then, of course, the Ethiopian civil war had ended, a new government had taken charge, and anyone who wanted to leave Ethiopia could do so legally – but only if they had a place to go. For thousands of Ethiopian Jews, that place – which they called Jerusalem – was Israel. It still is.

Ruth and I had become friends. She came to me for Shabbat and holiday dinners, and Passover Seders. We traveled together to England and to Holocaust sites in Europe.

Ruth walked a little more slowly in those latter days, but she never failed to get where she was going, to write about it, to photograph it, and to make sure people knew what needed to be done.

You may already know about Ruth’s earlier life, in which she made courageous forays into danger, including a dangerous crossing of the Atlantic during World War II to help 1000 refugees, mostly Jews, reach America. She defied British guns to expose the mistreatment of Jews on the Exodus ship – and reported Israel’s War of Independence from the front line.

You may also have noted that at age 84, she covered the 1995 Women’s Conference in Beijing – a hard, exhausting assignment. Ruth never stopped being amazing.

Ruth also had a happy, fulfilled private life. She raised children and step-children, collected dolls and received endless awards for journalism, photojournalism, humanitarian efforts and more.

But I think I can add one thing you may not know. When Ruth and I were on our Holocaust journey, I asked why she had so much luggage.

“Well,” she explained, “when I was packing, my assistant was helping me, and she kept putting out all these clothes. She said, ‘After all, Ruth, you are an elegant lady!’ So I took them.”

Ruth Gruber was a woman whose life-work impacted people all over the world – she made history. And, yes – she was an elegant lady too!

Ruth’s family has requested donations to NACOEJ in her memory to further the work that meant so much to her. Please see reply card.

A Little More about Ruth

Here is a note from Barbara Stern, whose late husband, Sid, was a dearly loved NACOEJ Board member:

Dear Barbara,

I saw Ruth Gruber’s obituary in the NY Times earlier this week and was reminded of all the work she did in support of NACOEJ.

Although it was Sid who worked with her – educating and fundraising – I met her several times at NACOEJ functions and found her to be bright, charming and awesome in her support of Ethiopian Jews and Jews everywhere.

I know that she was dedicated to the work that NACOEJ is doing.

I also know that you and Ruth had a very strong connection going back many years. I want to offer my condolences both to the organization and to you.

Sincerely, Barbara Stern
A "Bright Star"

We are very proud to announce that Hebrew University has named Shely Engedaw Vanda, who is sponsored by David and Aviva Rubin through the NACOEJ College Sponsorship Program, as one of their “Bright Stars”, a student who stands out!

Shely, who was born in Ethiopia and now lives in Israel with her husband and two-year-old daughter, is working on her PhD, doing research on social workers who work with distressed Ethiopian-Israeli children.

Congratulations Shely, David and Aviva on a partnership that is bearing sweet fruit!

To sponsor a “Bright Star” yourself, call 212-233-5200 ext. 230, or Email education@nacoej.org.

Sigd in Ethiopia in 2016

A note from a Jewish leader in Gondar, Ethiopia to NACOEJ:

On 30:11:2016 we celebrated the special holiday, “Hag Sigd” like the rest of the people who celebrated in Israel.

We leaders of the Jewish community would like to thank all donors for food.

Thanks to you, we distributed food to people who came to pray and people were very happy. It was important.

Thank you for helping us to distribute food to the community.

Ambanesh Tekeba

Sigd in Jerusalem 2016

In the NACOEJ Teaching Tent at the annual Sigd celebration in Jerusalem, our Israel Director, Shoshana Ben-Dor, explained the holiday liturgy to Ethiopian and non-Ethiopian Israelis, as she does every year. Shoshana can read Ge’ez, the ancient Semitic Ethiopian language of prayer.

She can also translate it into Hebrew for Israelis and, for tourists, into English – a unique set of skills.

Chanukah in the Limudiah in Israel

On Chanukah, first-grade Limudiah children at the Maapilim School in Lod (left) created their own adorable Chanukiot.

At the Rambam School in Lod (right), Limudiah children and teachers celebrated the first candle with chocolate-painted Chanukiot, sufganiyot (traditional Chanukah doughnuts), and very enthusiastic renditions of Israeli Chanukah songs.

Chanukah in Ethiopia

With awe and reverence, Jews in Ethiopia kindled Chanukiot in Gondar (above) and Addis Ababa.

In both towns, a modest holiday meal was served to hundreds of families, featuring potatoes, bananas, fresh-baked rolls and – surprise! – sufganiyot/style Chanukah doughnuts.

To the children, the doughnuts were a stunning, even bewildering, surprise. Some seemed unsure at first that they could eat them, but others greeted the treat with instant, delighted smiles.

Men and women, as well as children, are learning Hebrew in Ethiopia in hopeful preparation for Aliyah.

NACOEJ thanks our friends at Student Struggle to Save Ethiopian Jews for funding the Chanukah meals (especially the doughnuts!) in Addis Ababa and Gondar.

"You filled out the wrong form." That was the brutal response an Immigration Authority official gave at a meeting in the Knesset on Tuesday, as an Ethiopian Israeli former soldier described how his father has been stuck in Addis Ababa for 18 years, bedridden due to a car accident six years ago and barred from immigrating to Israel.

Dozens of Ethiopian-Israelis gathered in the Knesset on Tuesday to appeal to the government to allow their relatives to immigrate. Mankanto told the Knesset’s Immigration, Absorption and Diaspora Affairs Committee he had appealed to the Interior Ministry on behalf of his father, to no avail.

Teddy Pakada, an official from the Immigration Authority — which works under the Interior Ministry — insisted that Israeli soldiers regardless of religion or citizenship may request their parents be granted permission to move to Israel, once they’ve completed one year of service.
But Pakada told Mankanto that he had not issued a request as a soldier, but merely had lodged the general immigration request after his army service. “Did he turn to us on time? He didn’t,” said the official of Mankanto, referring to the period before he ended his military service. “We don’t know from the [general immigration] forms who is a soldier, who isn’t a soldier,” he added.

The committee meeting on Tuesday was scheduled to focus on Israeli soldiers whose parents were not allowed to immigrate from Ethiopia — but the military would not give the soldiers permission to attend. Instead, a number of discharged Ethiopian Israeli troops present at the meeting and numerous others told their stories and complained about bureaucratic hurdles and mixed messages.

The Jews left behind in Ethiopia are classified as Falashmura, a term for Ethiopian Jews whose ancestors converted to Christianity, often under duress, generations ago. Falashmura are not considered eligible for Israeli citizenship under the Law of Return, which requires at least one Jewish grandparent and disqualifies someone who has converted to another religion, even if the conversion happened a long time ago.

There are approximately 9,000 members of the Falashmura still living in Ethiopia who have not been allowed to immigrate to Israel because the Interior Ministry has determined they were not Jewish. Ethiopian Jews counter that the decades-old process to determine Jewish identity was poorly executed and inaccurate, dividing families. At least 80% of the Jews in Ethiopia have first-degree relatives living in Israel.

A government plan to bring the 9,000 Jews to Israel was approved in November 2015 but was not implemented because there was no budget for the program. Following protests, the Finance Ministry allocated a budget that enabled 1,300 Ethiopians to move to Israel over the next year. The first planeload carrying 63 immigrants arrived in October.

When Yahallem Tadessa immigrated to Israel, the single father, who says his wife was estranged, was not allowed to bring his two children — then aged 9 and 11 — with him.

“I got to Israel. Every day I fill out forms,” the Orthodox Israeli told the Knesset panel. Tadessa was initially told by the Interior Ministry that his children would only be permitted to immigrate when they reached the age of 18. So he waited.

But when both children came of age, the Interior Ministry cast doubt on his paternity. Tadessa proceeded to go to the Tel HaShomer Medical Center for a paternity test, ultimately proving he was their biological father. The ministry then told him that because there was no government resolution to resume immigration for the Falashmura, the children — now 22 and 24 — must remain in Ethiopia.

He’s still waiting.

The committee meeting gave a platform to over a dozen Israelis who described cases of sisters, parents, and even spouses and children left behind, while other relatives received immigration approval.

But the officials from the Interior Ministry and the Immigration Authority insisted the government policy was to keep spouses and children together.

“We don’t know and aren’t aware [of such cases],” an official from the Interior Ministry said. “Let them contact us and it will be checked.”

Responding to a suggestion by Likud MK Abraham Neguise that the government may have issued immigration approvals in 2013 but failed to update the information since, Teddy Pakada of the Immigration Authority said the office receives the information from the government, computerizes it “and works with the computer.”

He also contended that all the forms were accessible online at absorption centers and the directives were clear, earning catcalls and cries of “there is no explanation or anything,” and “it’s all lies” from hecklers.

“Our community does not use the internet,” responded Neguise, demanding the ministry make the guidelines more accessible and suggesting the directions be placed in Amharic and Hebrew ads on television and the radio, for example.

“It’s very sad” the army would not let soldiers with immediate family in Ethiopia attend, mused Neguise, the sole Ethiopian Israeli lawmaker in the Knesset, who ran the committee meeting.

An army representative present at the meeting said the military has no facts and figures on the number of soldiers with relatives in Ethiopia. “This issue is not under the responsibility of the IDF,” she said.

UPDATE FROM NACOEJ:
It now seems that the Aliyah of the 1300 immigrants scheduled to arrive, will take two years, not one, and that the 63 Ethiopian Jews who arrived last October were from a previous Aliyah, not this one. The agony on both sides of the Red Sea continues.
Leo Susi just celebrated his Bar Mitzvah. His grandparents, Naomi and Jerome Klosner, suggested that he give a specific amount from his Bar Mitzvah money to charitable causes.

Leo spent a long time thinking about it and researching various organizations. His grandfather suggested NACOEJ among a list of Jewish groups.

Leo’s grandfather, Jerome Klosner, has been a partner with NACOEJ since 1988 – 29 years!

After doing his research, Leo decided one of the organizations he would donate to was NACOEJ.

Here are his own words when we contacted him to ask him and his parents for permission to include this article and his photo (above) in Lifeline:

“I gave the gift because when I heard what your organization does, I wanted to help those people who most desperately are in need, and because there is a lot of prejudice against them.

“I didn’t expect to (or want to) get recognized for my donation, and thank you for that.

“Sincerely, Leo Susi”

Leo has clearly learned the importance of tzedakah from his parents and grandparents – a lesson that will benefit his whole life, as he benefits others.

Thank you Leo, thank you parents Darren and Lise, and thank you grandparents Jerome and Naomi – three generations who care deeply about Ethiopian Jews.

Congratulations to...

Three Generations Committed to Ethiopian Jews

HAPPY 35TH ANNIVERSARY TO ALL OF US!
2017 marks NACOEJ’s 35th anniversary. From our humble beginnings in Barbara Ribakove’s living room in New York in 1982, we have grown to become a major source of support and assistance to Ethiopian Jews.

And the only way this has been possible – from the very beginning – is because we have had the dedicated partnership of you, our dear friends.

So together we can celebrate 35 years of achievement – 35 years of saving lives, 35 years of providing food and education, love and caring.

As we look forward, we still have a great deal of work to be done.

We pray that you will stay the course with us as we continue to fulfill our mission of caring for Ethiopian Jews.

Your generous support today will continue to make a great difference in the lives and futures of Ethiopian Jews.

Happy 35th Anniversary to All of Us!
